

Family
Note

The concept of passing time can be difficult for young children to understand. Talking about how many minutes or hours it takes to do something or go somewhere and using clocks and calendars will help your child begin to grasp this concept. Children can learn a great deal from using these timing devices, and they enjoy doing it.

Set the kitchen timer when you are cooking.

Think of other ways that setting a timer might be useful. For example, estimate how long it will take to get dressed. Set the timer, and then try to beat it.
